PLAN MELBOURNE 2017-2050

"The Melbourne of today is a successful city. That success is built in part on the transport decisions and investments made by previous generations - and it is a legacy that has served Melbourne well."

Tony Abbott rushed a promise to hand over $3 billion of East West Link cash despite "clear advice" from the public service that the project hadn't been justified

In a damning assessment, federal Auditor-General Grant Hehir has revealed Mr Abbott personally approved payments for both sections of the road, signing over half the money, $1.5 billion, on the last day of 2013-14 to maximise the budget deficit pain in Labor's final financial year.

Plan Melbourne: Wrong way, go back

For the first time, and ahead of the release of Plan Melbourne, the woman who headed the committee asked to draft the plan tells Shane Green why she walked out on the government in disgust.

Roz Hansen remembers the meeting at No. 1 Spring Street as particularly unpleasant. Hansen and her handpicked team of six had been working away on the draft planning strategy for Melbourne, a vision that would guide the burgeoning city to 2050.

The group had the official title of the Ministerial Advisory Committee, appointed by Planning Minister Matthew Guy in May 2012 to "direct the development of the strategy".

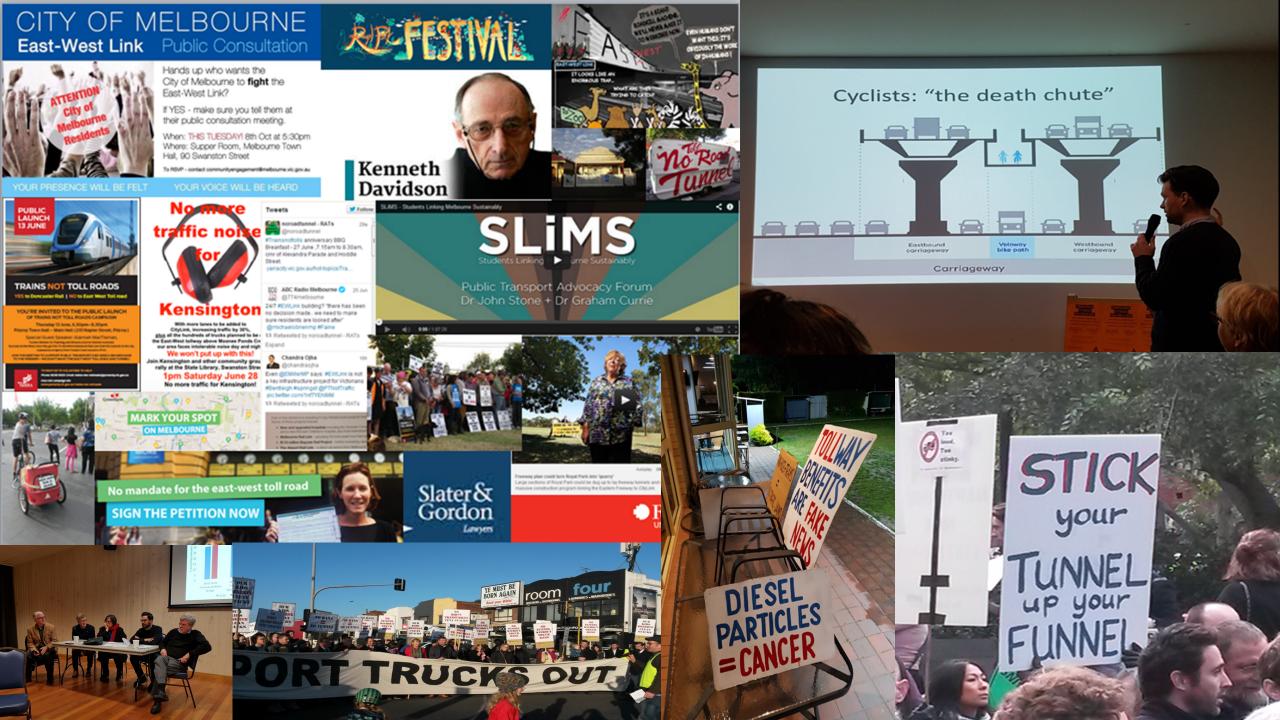

Urban planning expert Roz Hansen is disappointed by Planning Minister Matthew Guy's response to her committee's suggestions for Melbourne's future. JOE ARMAO

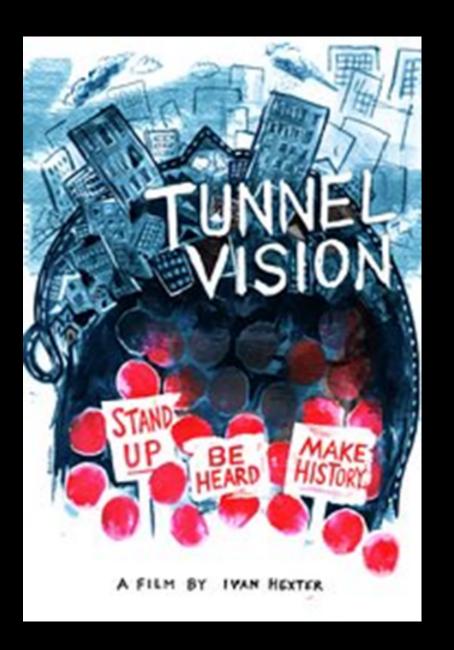

That is precisely what it had done for the previous 12 months, which included exhaustive public consultations to tap into the concerns of everyday people.
